

The homeless need internet access, too

People experiencing homelessness rely on the internet to apply for housing and benefits, schedule appointments with doctors and case managers, search for jobs, and stay in touch with family and friends. It's a lifeline for getting back on your feet.

ShelterConnect works with internet service providers to offer free wifi in shelters and transitional housing facilities.

So far ShelterConnect has installed and provided free wifi in one shelter and two transitional housing facilities in San Francisco, providing free wifi to over 1200 people in need.

Can any shelter get free wifi?

Any organization that operates a shelter, SRO, or other transitional housing facility that does not currently offer wifi can apply for ShelterConnect.

Who operates ShelterConnect?

ShelterConnect is a program offered by ShelterTech, a 501c(3) non-profit and the City of San Francisco's official human services data provider.

How can I learn more about ShelterConnect?

Contact Molly Cohen, ShelterConnect Lead, via email at molly.cohen@sheltertech.org or call +1 (617) 797-7754.